WHY SHOULD YOU TAKE THIS COURSE?

As an object of state and legal action, the economy is a complex phenomenon, as a system of relations for the production, distribution, exchange and consumption of material goods. The legal form is most consistent with the nature of economic relations, their market nature. The formation of economic relations has given rise to various institutional forms of their consolidation, stabilization, development and protection. Law and economics are closely interrelated, because the nature and content of law are directly dependent on economic relations, property relations. Ukraine, as a modern state, actively uses the law to act on the economy through the regulation of property, labor relations, commodity relations, financial, tax, customs, etc., namely the adoption of relevant legislation. Thus, the rules of law reflect economic relations, economic interests of owners and other social groups of the population of Ukraine. Law not only affects the economy, it is an immanent part of it.

Thus, law can be interesting as a way of self-regulation of the economy, as legal freedom and security, which allow businesses to hear market signals and take them into account, to regulate the economic aspects of entrepreneurship by law and through law.

The teaching staff and your colleagues will be ready to provide any assistance with some of the most challenging aspects of the course via email, forum and in person - during business hours.
